2004

The Idea of Two

Charles Freeland

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5794
The Idea of Two

In the dirt, under the floorboards of a shed, Grubb finds a mummy. The shed is falling in, with ivy creepers on the walls, inside and out; Grubb can't tell if it belongs to anyone in particular or has merely been forgotten like a horse. The mummy is paper all over & it rustles when he picks it up... he thinks if he had a pen he'd write a note to whoever might find the mummy next... discovered mummy whilst panning for gold. This is a lie, of course, but a certain misdirection is to be expected when commenting on the dead. Grubb gets homesick & drinks from the bottle of rum he finds in a corner. He weeps. O! he says, who will make a mummy of me? Outside, the coyotes move about like water, he can hear them in the leaves; the moon pokes its head in through the creepers, and then, for a moment, Grubb thinks he sees a second universe. Excited, he shakes his companion by the shoulders... soon, there is nothing left of it but the seams.