2004

In the Orchard of Star Fruit

Robert Grunst

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5829

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
ROBERT GRUNST

In the Orchard of Star Fruit

whereupon storm clouds ion-charged rains onshore dishevelings the manna grass sways no opinion where the lost path begins where no other sign if ever but the orchard of star fruit where stars’ shapes descend upon near-sighted seers where the fishermen trust in absence buoys nets coils of manila with no wonder no art intended where the painters’ thumbs mend well-splinted and taped where the cistern’s cool vault of spring water wears a sweater of mosses where two strands of wire guide Félicité y Clément Santa y Santo in keeping the fishermen’s finca winch clevis-and-cable cabañas coconut palm fence posts full-flowering hedges the cove’s throat gaping onto the sea near Isla del Caño where sleeves of reef fish flap against set lines beneath the orchard of star fruit where barbed wire stars seize relics of hair but no fees for nest-weavers

where chance is a new moon’s bent needle divining no pole star nor nuncio’s five-cornered hat where two horses’ eyes foresee no joy and no sorrow weighing low branches our hands full of ripe star fruit of the fourteen trees of the orchard juice-gravid fruit and no art

no wonder intended no impoverishing benchmark no satellite radians reciprocals waypoints no trace to show where the lost path begins