Cooking Supper While My Sister Dies

She takes her last meal of sugar water and oblivion, the needle keen as a knife, a double-edged bridge she must cross into the Unsayable. Wait, I say, wait— but she will not, nor can I go with her, delay in each grain of rice, exile in the onions I chop so fine I am word blind, my face wet with the rain that was her grief, and mine, that we did not love each other long enough. Black olives, then zucchini diced, swept into a pan from the wooden board, a heave offering to the wine dark sea.

And I must . . . I can only . . . I am left with . . .
this tomato, sun-ripened and taut, tinged green at the pock where it let go of the vine. Into hinged wedges I cut it slowly. Slowly. Wanting her to be like a flower that opens into a summer night of stars, breath by breath.

Wondering, Is it here? Is it yet? Is it now?
