By a Creek

But I'm not there. Right now I'm sitting in a room alone, remembering being there. I can feel absolutely sure that creek is rushing forward, pausing in hollows, turning over and under itself and pouring whatever it has to give in whatever order water manages to perform whatever whitens into a constant cascade of what it was all along and is and is going to be again and again. It comforted and bewildered me, both of me, at the same time, year after year. It kept saying I'm here. I wasn't here an instant ago, but now I'm here and gone. I'm going to be here again this moment, and already I'm falling out of the same place I'm going to be always.
