LEE MILLER PHOTOGRAPHS AMELIA EARHART
AFTER SHE’S DISAPPEARED.

The air was a distraction and for that reason a crux of reason. I photographed it, incident to rumors of debris. I had my hands, I had fealty to pay, hand to light, clock-time to gravity.

Photography loves the foregone conclusion.

I’ve always loved, especially, the betrayers and the ones for whom mechanisms so utterly work:

Ta Da.

The picture gives up all volition, like a sick drunk vomiting. That’s just as much a vision of the mechanism.

A vision of the mechanism. My fealty. I took,

or they took themselves, the most astonishing photos from inside the plane. And now, the taxing, the indebtedness of disappearance.

My gift for disgorging

and its clockwork precision.
