Djinn

Desirée Alvarez

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.7188

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
DJINN

When I was the warrior
my hair hung blackly below my knees.

I studied the service that is the blue holding the sky.

At sixteen I shed the turban,
cut my tress and gave it to mother to wear.

She will know what to do
when it’s coiled at the back of her head.

What is hard is hacking off the face from desire.
I was moving between two camps.

I have stayed too long in places unvisited by monsoon.
In all my time here I’ve seen only one cat.

I remove my hands from the wire hive of sleep.
I am afraid of myself.

I always leave the lights on in my chandelier.

After the many hours flaming,
my body begins to shake with the thousand bulbs.

I dip them in the sweet water of burn where every night my steel knife puts the river to sleep.